When to Have the Talk

It's never too early

Planning ahead brings peace of mind. Don't wait for a crisis; having a plan ready ensures a smoother, less stressful transition when the time comes.

Someone has to initiate the conversation

As our parents guided us, now it's our turn to ensure their future is bright. Starting the conversation is a meaningful gift to them.

Set a date or be committed to look for an opportunity

Choose a calm moment to start the discussion. Avoid busy family gatherings and involve all family members to keep everyone on the same page.

How To Have the Talk

Start with your spouse

Ensure you both agree on the need and outcomes. Discuss potential sacrifices and align your views.

This is a positive opportunity

Focus on the next chapter. Ask about their hopes and desires to create excitement, not anxiety.

Consider and address barriers

Address past hurts and fears. Build trust for a fruitful conversation and a better relationship.

Set aside adequate time

Let the conversation flow naturally. Give them time to dream and think about their future.

Remember who this is for

Show your love and support for your parent. Focus on their needs first.

Make a plan to move forward

Turn discussion into action. Support them step by step.

Talking about Options

It's a good idea to talk through all these options! This is the spitball phase so even if you don't think it's a good idea take the time to talk through each one.

Aging in place – remodel home if needed?

- Senior apartments
- Assisted living
- In law-suite attached to family's home
- In law-suite stand alone on family's property

Tips about talking about options:

- List pros and cons.
- Talk about the financial needs of each option.
- Talk about future health related needs and caregiver options.
